

POETRY.

The following beautiful stanzas, to the memory of Sir John Stevenson, are extracted from the concluding volume of Moore's Irish Melodies:

Silence is in our festal halls,—
O Son of Song! thy course is o'er;
In vain on thee and Erin calls,—
Her minstrel's voice responds no more—
All silent as the Eolian shell
Sleeps at the close of some bright day,
When the sweet breeze, that waft'd its swill
At sunny morn, had died away.

Yet, at our feasts, thy spirit long
Awak'd by music's spell shall rise;
For, unto so link'd with deathless song
Partakes its charm and never dies;
And e'en within the holy flame,
When music wafts the soul to heaven,
One thought to him, whose earliest strain
Was echoed there, shall long be given.

But, where is now the cheerful day,
The social night, when, by thy side,
He who now weaves the parting lay,
His skillful voice with thine allied;
And sung those songs whose every tone,
When bard and minstrel long have past,
Shall still, in sweetness all their own,
Embrace'd by Fame, undying last.

Yes, Erin, thine alone the fame—
Or, if thy bard have shrunk the crown,
From thee the borrow'd glory came,
And at thy feet is now laid down.
Enough, if Freedom still inspire
His latest song, and still there be,
As evening closes round his lyre,
One ray upon its chords from thee.

Further Extracts from Bulwer's "Last Days of Pompeii."

COMBAT IN THE CIRCUS.

We have only to observe that both the combatants have been victorious in one species of combat, but that Lydon is young and unpractised, and only stimulated by the hope that the prize would buy his father's freedom. "Throughout that night assembly there now ran a universal movement, the people breathed more freely, and re-settled themselves in their seats. A grateful shower was cast over every row, from the concealed conduits. In cool and luxurious pleasure they talked over the late spectacle of blood. Eumolpus removed his helmet, and wiped his brow—his close-curl'd hair and short beard, his noble Roman features and bright dark eye, attracted the general admiration. He was fresh, unwounded, unfatigued. The editor paused, and proclaimed aloud that, as Niger's wound disabled him from again entering the arena, Lydon was to be the successor to the slaughtered Nepinus, and the new combatant of Eumolpus. 'Yet, Lydon,' added he, 'if thou wouldst decline the combat with one so brave and tried, thou mayest have full liberty to do so. Eumolpus is not the antagonist that was originally decreed for thee. Thou knowest best how far thou canst cope with him. If thou failest, thy doom is honorable death—if thou conquerest, out of my own purse I will double the stipulated prize.' The people shouted applause. Lydon stood in the lists—he gazed around—high above, he beheld the pale face, the straining eyes of his father.

He turned away irresolute for a moment. No! the conquest of the cestus was not sufficient—he had not yet won the price of victory—his father was still a slave!—'Noble edile!' he replied, in a firm and deep tone, 'I shrink not from this combat. For the honor of Pompeii, I demand that one trained by his long-celebrated Lanista shall do battle with this Roman!' The people shouted louder than before. 'Four to one against Lydon!' said Clodius to Lepidus. 'I would not take twenty to one! Why, Eumolpus is a very Achilles, and this poor fellow is but a tyro!' Eumolpus gazed hard on the face of Lydon; he smiled; yet the smile was followed by a slight and scarce audible sigh—a touch of compassionate emotion, which custom conquered the moment the heart acknowledged it. And now both, clad in complete armour, the sword drawn, the visor closed, the two last combatants of the arena (ere man, at least, was matched with beast), stood opposed to each other. It was just at this time that a letter was delivered to the Prætor by one of the attendants of the arena; he removed the cincture—glanced over it for a moment—his countenance betrayed surprise and embarrassment. He re-read the letter, and then muttering—'Tush! it is impossible!—the man must be drunk, even in the morning, to dream of such follies!'—threw it carelessly aside, and gravely settled himself once more in the attitude of attention to the sports.

The interest of the public was wound up very high. Eumolpus had at first won their favour; but the gallantry of Lydon, and his well-timed allusion to the honour of the Pompeian Lanista, had afterwards given the latter the preference in their eyes. 'Holla, old fellow! said Medon's neighbour to him. 'Your son is hardly matched; but, never fear, the Editor will not permit him to be slain,—no, nor the people neither; he has behaved too bravely for that. Ha! that was a home thrust!—well averted, by Pollux! At him again, Lydon!—they stop to breathe! What art thou uttering, old boy?' 'Prayers!' answered Medon, with a more calm and hopeful mien than he had yet maintained. 'Prayers!'—trifles! The time for gods to carry a man away in a cloud is gone now. Ha, Jupiter!—what a blow! Thy side—thy side!—take care of thy side, Lydon! There was a convulsive tremor throughout the assembly. A fierce blow from Eumolpus, full on the crest, had brought Lydon to his knee. 'Habet!—he has it!' cried a shrill female voice: 'he has it!—huzza!' It was the voice of the girl who had so anxiously anticipated the sacrifice of some criminal to the beasts. 'Be silent, child!' said the wife of Pansa, haughtily. 'Non habet!—he is not wounded!' 'I wish he were, if only to spite old surly Medon,' muttered the girl. Meanwhile Lydon, who had hitherto defended himself with great skill and valour, began to give way before the vigorous assaults of the practised Roman; his arm grew tired, his eye dizzy, he breathed hard and painfully.

The combatants paused again for breath. 'Young man,' said Eumolpus, in a low voice, 'desist; I will wound thee slightly—then lower thy arms; thou hast propitiated the Editor and the mob—thou wilt be honorably saved!' 'And my father still enslaved!' groaned Lydon to himself. 'No, death or his freedom.' At that thought, and seeing that his strength not being equal to the endurance of the Roman, every thing depended on a sudden and desperate effort, he threw himself fiercely on Eumolpus; the Roman warily retreated—Lydon thrust again—Eumolpus drew himself aside—the sword grazed his cuirass—Lydon's breast was exposed—the Roman plunged his sword through the joints of the armour, not meaning however, to inflict a deep wound: Lydon, weak and exhausted, fell forward—fell right on the point: it passed through and through, even to the back! Eumolpus drew forth his blade; Lydon still made an effort to regain his balance—his sword left his grasp—he struck mechanically at the gladiator with his naked hand, and fell prostrate on the arena.

With one accord Editor and assembly made the signal of mercy—the officers of the arena approached—they took off the helmet of the vanquished. He still breathed; his eyes rolled fiercely on his foe; the savagery he had acquired in his calling glared from his gaze, and lowered upon the brow darkened already with the shades of death; then with a convulsive groan, with a half start, he lifted his eyes above. They rested not on the face of the Editor, nor on the pitying brows of his relucant judges. He saw them not; they were as if the vast space was desolate and bare; one pale agonising face alone was all he recognised; one cry of a broken heart was all that, amidst the murmurs and shouts of the populace, reached his ear. The ferocity vanished from his brow; a soft, a tender expression of sanctifying but despairing filial love played over his features—played—waned—darkened! His face suddenly became locked and rigid, resuming its former fierceness. He fell upon the earth. 'Look to him,' said the Edile, 'he has done his duty!'

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1834.

The mild and gentle Atlas has blown itself into a terrible fury about a letter from this city published in the Washington Globe, and which will be found below. It says that "EAR-CROPPING AND THE PILLO- RY ARE THE ONLY SUITABLE REWARDS FOR THESE RUSSIAN POLITICIANS," [the Jackson party of Boston.] Who the author of the letter is we do not know, but his statements, so far as our knowledge extends, are correct. The Atlas, however, is wide of its mark in attributing it to the individual it has; and consequently, like the man who thought he was listening to Whitfield, but afterwards found another was preaching, has "rolled in the mud for nothing"—but such mistakes are not new to the Atlas.

We cannot, after all, avoid admiring the manly justice, and honorable independence of the Atlas. It can libel an individual, and urge insult and violence upon him, to gratify its rancour, without scruple—it can witness the most loathsome acts perpetrated by its own partisans, and allow them to pass without even a shake of its head in token of reproof—but, presto! the moment its own withers are wrung, the whole welkin sounds again with its coarse revellings, and it cries for what its own presence makes it fear—"ear-cropping and the pillory."

Boston, Nov. 11, 1834.

Dear Sir—Our election took place yesterday, the general detail of which, you will see in the papers.—There are some facts, however, concerning it which do not appear there. The federal party never made such efforts before—they boasted that no Whig, white, black or yellow, that was well enough to be got to the polls, but voted. They spent money in great profusion, and bought votes as openly as their Tory brethren ever did in the rotten boroughs of old England. They got up a negro meeting, under the management of two of their committee men, and published their Whig resolutions. The emancipationists (violent Whigs) wrote a letter to Mr Lawrence, to learn his views upon emancipation and slavery, and though he evaded any answer to their question in his letter, yet the negroes were told that he was for immediate emancipation, and they voted under this impression. A fund was raised by the Bank men, and placed in the hands of two negro treasurers, to pay a poll tax for each negro to make him a voter, and also to pay their leaders a handsome sum. Negro vote distributors were stationed at the several polls, to aid their brethren, the white Whigs, and the white dandies were seen arm in arm in the street, or side by side in a carriage, taking their negro brethren to the polls. The city authorities, too, evincing a preference, and showed a partiality in putting the negro names upon the voting list, to the exclusion of white Jackson men—the Mayor and Aldermen not having or not finding time to place all on who applied. The negroes carried from eight hundred to one thousand federal or Whig votes, Mr Lyman, the Mayor, voting the same ticket.

Our friends, despairing of success, made little exertion, except through the newspapers. On the whole, I look upon this election as favorable to the Democratic party in this State. The two small parties of Antislavery and Workingmen recruited their forces mainly from our ranks; and after this I presume they will never again enter the contest under a separate organization. Hence, next year, we shall have a clear field for a fair fight with the old enemy. It will be distinctly the democracy against the aristocracy, which will give us many advantages.

Mr Osgood has lost his election, as we expected he would. I think Mr Baylies will give place to Mr Borden. Mr Borden is an Antislavery Jackson man, and against the Bank—so that we lose nothing in numbers in our Congress men. I have, besides, some slight hopes of Berkshire and Hampshire.

Mr Polindexter harangued the Whigs last night from the portico of the Tremont Inn, and his partisans gave him a supper at that house. His speech, I am told, was very inflammatory, and the federal mobs were very insolent last night. They seemed to consider their success here as the utter prostration of the whole democracy of the country. They are so vain-glorious, and ignorant withal, that most of their party look upon Boston as equal to the rest of the United States.

The Brooklyn Advertiser, speaking of the Massachusetts election, says—"The Congressional Delegation from Massachusetts has never been unanimous before. Generally one or two Jacksonmen have been shuffled into the House, by some legerdemain."

The delegation from this State has always been unanimous since 1824, until the present Congress, when, for the first time, a Jackson man was elected from a District where the Federalists had a large majority, because they were ashamed to vote for their regular candidate—but since the example set them by their Senators in Congress they do not stick at anything, and consequently Caleb Cushing has been voted an Honorable man.

The Last Days of Pompeii, Bulwer's new work, has been re-published by the Harpers. We copied some extracts from it yesterday, and have continued them to-day. It is a work of great interest, emanating from one of the most powerful, original and fascinating minds of the age—combining in its elements the grace of Poetry, the wisdom of Philosophy, and the fire of Patriotism. An English paper, in remarking upon Mr Bulwer's productions, says—"We cannot but observe in what a different style each has been conceived. How unlike Eugene Aram was to Pelham, and how opposed is The Last Days of Pompeii to either! It is more picturesque, more richly colored than its predecessors; indeed, only like them in its deep knowledge of, and its profound sympathy with, human nature."

The Comprehensive Atlas.—This work, edited by T. G. Bradford, Esq., is about to be published by subscription, by Messrs Allen & Ticknor. It is thus far executed in a beautiful style as regards its typography; and the geographical and statistical matter is invaluable. The whole is arranged on a new but convenient plan for reference, bringing the map of each state and country into immediate connection with the letter-press details respecting it. The work is one of liberal enterprise on the part of the proprietors; and deserves a liberal patronage at the hands of the public. It will be of thrice the value of the subscription price to any one who wishes to possess an authentic book of reference on geography, history and commercial statistics.

The Atlas recommends that a Swiggy be held in every town in the Commonwealth—a regular Tavern jollification, at the result of the late election in "the land of steady habits."

Vermont.—According to the Albany Evening Journal, Mr Everett, the Bank candidate in the 3d district, has succeeded by a small majority; while in the 4th (Burlington) district there is no choice.

"The Shoemaker of Toulouse" was played for the seventh time to a very good house, at the Warren, on Thursday evening. Mr Hill has been more successful in rendering this drama than he was in the "Six Degrees of Crime," which was very popular. The principal character in the piece, the Shoemaker, is a most admirable one—Jacob Odet is possessed of all those high and noble feelings which Heaven occasionally implants in the bosom of man to purify his race—a soul directed by the highest impulses—determined energy, and a morality as far above reproach, as its humble possessor's situation places him beyond the influence of luxurious vice. Jacob is a natural character—for how often does the great Ruler of the universe effect his most important purposes through the agency of those whom the world has looked upon as among the despised and contemptible. In the hands of Mr Blake this character was portrayed throughout with a propriety which could not have been surpassed—his conception of the part, in our opinion, was perfect, and his style of representing it a most impressive and beautiful display of histrionic talent. The rest of the characters were not well enacted, with a few exceptions. The Duke wriggles and twists enough to unscrew his dignity, while his preceptor, instead of assuming the affable, gay, dashing air of the Rochester-like character set down for him, reminded us of Mauworn. Mrs Houpt does full justice to Margaret, but we think her jests are rather mal a propos, and too long continued, while old Pajot is holding his pistol at Madinier's breast—a man would hardly stop to hear his servant maid crack jokes under the excitement by which Pajot is supposed to be moved. Pajot, by the way, Mr Palmer played excellently well. Chignard was made a Circus Clown by Mr Williams, instead of a facetious and pampered favorite of a Court, as the author probably intended he should be. We think it would improve the piece by omitting the attempted intrigue between Madinier and Margaret.

Finally, "The Shoemaker of Toulouse" is a piece of great ingenuity and interest—one of mind—not of stage trick—yet with enough of startling incident, naturally introduced, to satisfy the most intense lovers of sudden astonishment. It cannot fail of becoming one among our most popular standard plays.

Peleg Sprague has notified the members elect of the Legislature of Maine that he shall resign his seat in the U. S. Senate on the first day of its next session—i. e. will go to Washington and take his seat for a few hours, in order to get his travelling expenses paid by the people, and then surrender.

Mr Preston.—Later advices state that Mr Preston's illness was not occasioned by a paralysis, and that he is likely to recover.

There has been a heavy gale at St. Augustine, lately, which done considerable damage to the shipping.

From Havana.—The schr John C. Calhoun, Capt Ross, arrived at Charleston, brings Havana papers to the 7th inst. inclusive.

Havana, Nov. 6.—The Calhoun's cargo of rice, rather inferior, we have sold at 10 a 11 rs. For the Ricafort's cargo, much better in quality, the same offer has been made by our dealers, but as yet has not been accepted.

The constant supplies of Lard, both from Boston and New Orleans, keep the market in a depressed state, and so long as our dealers have no other offers, they only take the very first quality, which now commands 12 to 12 1/2—inferior 10 to 11 1/2.

New Coffee is scarce, and brings readily 10 1/2 to 11—some parcels of superior quality, although of small bean, have been paid 11 1/2 for New Orleans. Referring in all other respects to the enclosed Price Current, we have only further to add, that after the first January next, Rice will be valued by our Custom House at $6, instead of $5—but the duty will be $1 50, instead of $1 50 rs. qql.

Havana, Nov. 6.—The new crop of Coffee comes in very slowly, and as yet of low quality, but should the weather be good, it will come in more freely in a little time. The rains have prevented its being ready, and if it had been ready, the roads would not have permitted of much reaching market—what new has come in, sold at about 10 1/4—one sample not quite green, and small bean is held at 11 1/2."

Extract of a letter from Jamaica of the 14th October.—"As the negroes only work when they think proper, and scarcely do any thing when they do work, the prospects of the colonists are as bad as possible, and those who were in the habit of making a hundred hogheads of sugar will not now make twenty-five, and the falling off will be the same in proportion with pimento, coffee, and every thing else.

"No blood has been spilt as yet, but as we stand on a volcano, there's no knowing how soon it may take place, as the negroes are ripe for any thing, and I am sorry to say, the special magistrates sent out from England, so far from allaying the insurrectionary spirit of the negroes, by their injudicious measures have rather increased it than otherwise. Much fault has been found with the governor also, but he is a noble, firm character, and in my opinion does not deserve it, as he is compelled to follow his instructions from the ministry, and cannot act otherwise.

"As I am perfectly acquainted with all the causes that led to the ruin of St Domingo, I can only say that the British government are pursuing the same measures here; and nothing can prevent the colony from experiencing a similar fate, and perhaps worse, for the negroes here, notwithstanding all that has been done for them, are of a more ferocious character than those of St Domingo. Here, they are invariably drunkards, and brutal in the extreme; there they were not so, but on the contrary, rather polite and civil. Should we therefore, have any thing like an insurrection, it will be most bloody. Of this they gave a pretty good specimen on the last occasion. Our assembly is in session.—N. Y. Star

Revolt.—A Hanging Matter.—Four seamen, Wm Austin, James Biglan, Daniel O'Condon, and Charles H. A. Thompson, belonging to the brig Julia, bound to Lisbon, were committed to Bridewell yesterday for a revolt on Sunday on board of that vessel. It appeared that the brig had left her moorings at the East river and dropped down to Bedlow's Island; on Sunday evening they asked the mate, Samuel M. Whitlock, to let them leave the brig and come to New York. He refused—when they fell on him—beat him—one stabbed him in the hand—and then seized the boat and came up to this city. On Monday afternoon they ventured to the brig with the boat, but they refused to work; warrants were then obtained for them. They were arrested by Lyons the officer.—N. Y. Trans.

North Carolina cannot only boast of her sons so long in stature, but can pride herself on the lengthened lives of both sons and daughters. A family residing in Sampson county, of that State, consisting of two brothers and sister, can count 284 years between them—the eldest of whom, Mrs Ann Dougherty, is 97; the second, Simcoe Hobbs, 94 years, six months; and the youngest, Wm Hobbs, 92 years and six months.

TRIAL OF THE SPANISH PIRATES.

[U. S. Circuit Court, Friday, Nov. 21, 1834.]

The closing argument, for the defence, was commenced this morning, by DAVID L. CHILD, Esq., who went into an extremely minute review of the extended line of evidence that had been brought to bear against the prisoners. For want of room, we can only give the points and exceptions taken by Mr C. in his elaborate, interesting, and able argument:—

Mr Child remarked, in the earlier portion of his address, that the arrival of the prisoners to this country had been preceded by a rumor, that when on the coast of Africa, and pursued by the English, they had excited the savages of Africa to acts of hostility, followed by the loss of life, against the English, for attempting to molest the pirates; but this was not true. On the contrary, they used their influence to repress the hostile feelings of the natives towards the English. * * * The question is—not whether a piracy has been committed—of that there is no ground to doubt—but whether the prisoners committed it, and if a doubt exists, it must incline to the side of mercy. The first witness to whom our attention should be directed, is Perez, the accomplice in the crime, if there were one committed, and his extraordinary conduct on the stand—the passion with which he was transported—the rage and intemperance of feelings exhibited by him, would lead any member of the jury to distrust him in the most ordinary affair, and would never make him the depository of any trust which they deemed important. He is also interested in producing a conviction—he feels it incumbent on himself to convict the prisoners to keep himself from being placed in the same situation that they are in—he fears that the pledge given him by the government will not be redeemed, unless they are condemned, and this excites his apprehensions; he is actuated by hope, fear, resentment and rage. It was even necessary to interrupt the course of the trial to give his resentment time to cool, and that his temper might be soothed and assuaged. * * * I never knew a witness whose testimony and hypocrisy were so completely exposed from his own lips. It is impossible to imagine his motive for saying he could neither read nor write—he said he only knew the letters P, D, O, and U, and those only, and thus he accounted for his knowing what the letters on the boxes of money were. But when the Alphabet was placed in his hands, and his attention called to it, in an inverted order, he made out all the letters but W and K, the former of which does not occur in the Spanish, and the latter, which he called H, but seldom. He also read the indictment perfectly intelligibly to any one acquainted with the Spanish language. He grew impatient and wrathly at the experiment. He broke out with vehemence, and said he wanted to tell about the division of the money, with the most shocking profanity—this was the ruling idea that he had been brooding on for a year or more. When asked if he could read the name of the Mexican on her stern, he replies, "I cannot read Spanish, how then can I read English?" The circumstance of his finally reading does not obliterate the guilt he had contracted by the deliberate falsehood he had committed when he swore to his inability to read. When he was asked if he could write, and swore he could not, it was observed by many intelligent gentlemen, that he took the pen in a most clerical manner—with the utmost grace and ease: he makes the first letter of his name, and forms the elements of others, in a style that exhibits proof of his being a skillful penman.

Perez says he could not well recollect what took place when the Pinda was captured, because he was afraid of being taken a prisoner, as he had never been a prisoner before; but in the course of the cross-examination, it came out, that he had been once before taken into Havana, a prisoner, in the Eagle, captured for having slaves on board. At Petit Sestos, he tells us, that Capt Gibert, when he saw an English frigate approaching, ordered all the knives to be concealed. What motive could Capt Gibert have for such a step? Is it not the universal custom of Spanish sailors, in that trade, to carry such knives? and could their being in possession of English captain? He says, too, that the boat was stove in with "something heavy;" but after some reflection, he says it was done with the axe the carpenter put with him "to scuttle the Mexican with." To scuttle a brig with an axe! Is that an instrument for such a purpose? He evidently lugs in the axe solely for the purpose of putting something into the carpenter's hands to save the boat in with. In one place he says, as he was in the top, he could not see who fastened the crew below, but in another he saw the 3d mate and boatswain drive them aft, the former armed with a sword. He assigns his being in the top as a reason for seeing every thing, and on the cross-examination, he assigns the same reason for not seeing any thing. He says he was kept in the top six or eight hours, as a punishment, as if any officer would be likely to station a man, for a punishment, at a post where he might betray the ship.

He says at first the men were white and sometimes black, and soon afterwards says that he never saw any black ones on board; that the boatswain was a poor man, and had no jacket, but afterwards says, when he boarded the Mexican, he wore a black monkey jacket. He seems to luxuriate in lying; but whether from malice, or whether he be demented, I know not; but from whatever cause, his testimony cannot have any weight in the scale of evidence in this case. * * * He says there was no principle, or rule, adopted for sharing the money; but can we believe, that after perilling their very souls in the undertaking, they would throw away the fruits of the crime, in the commission of which they had bartered away their innocence? He says he is old only twenty-two years, but finally says he was a cabin boy, when Morillo was commander of the Spanish forces in South America, eighteen years ago, which must make him at least ten years older than what he swears himself to be.

He says he was told that if he would declare he might escape with a short imprisonment. What does that imply? Why, that if he did not declare, he would be subjected to a long imprisonment, and perhaps something worse. We asked him if he had any thing to drink at Fernando Po, when he made his deposition, and he says "no." Yet he voluntarily tells Mr Badlam, that what he had said "was all a lie," and that they had given him much wine. If, in this denial, the jury believe that he perjured himself, then is his testimony entirely destroyed. He says, too, the carpenter put fire to a bag of gunpowder in the magazine. Is that possible? Would he not have been blown into the air ere he could have reached his boat.

At Petit Sestos, he says Capt. Gibert wished to blow up a Spanish schooner—a vessel belonging to the same nation as himself—an act for which he must know it to be impossible to escape condign punishment. What a reason, too, does Perez give for his not doing it?—Capt Gibert gives up the plan, because the wind was high; as if Capt Gibert, if he was ever so mad as to have meditated the destruction of the schooner, could not have found an opportunity for effecting his purpose. According to this witness, Capt. G. receives 13 or 14 thousand dollars of the money—in utter disregard of all proportion; and that he also sends $1000 to Ambrose, the 3d mate; but the other witnesses for the government state that this 3d mate escaped in February, on board of an English vessel, in consequence of a quarrel with the boatswain; but the money was never divided till after the schooner was captured. It must have been after the capture.

Perez says that the mate, de Soto, was employed during his sickness at Principi, in making up a false log book; but where is it? Was it not made to propagate a falsehood, but has it been used for that purpose?—Has it ever been seen even? Is there any evidence that it was ever used any where? [Mr Child here referred to the story of the conspiracy against Susanna, detected and defeated by the Prophet Daniel.] "It is easy," said he, "to frame a large falsehood, and it is only by indirect and collateral injuries, that the innocent can be vindicated, and the guilt of the conspirators be made manifest. No witness acquainted at all with the Pinda, says she had a scutrel, but Captain Butman thinks the gun that was fired was a scutrel. In his printed statement, when the facts were all fresh, he states the number of men to be seventy; in his log, they are stated to be eighty; but in his testimony they are tapered down to 50 or 60. The mate, however, still adheres to the 70 or 80. [The Pinda's crew consisted of only 30.]

The log book also says, "2 long brass 12 pounders;" but Capt B. says they might have been iron, scoured. A "scoured" iron gun! It would not be a greater phenomenon, nor excite more astonishment, if a shade should ascend from the regions below, and stalk abroad at noon day, than to see a cannon scoured and glittering in the sun. There is a manifest disposition on the part of the witnesses, a combination, to narrow down the testimony, and make the chain cohere, and the manner in which they have tapered down the number of the piratical crew, to make them correspond with the Pinda's crew, is a striking evidence of the operation of this disposition. Perez says that Perico was the only one on board who spoke English; and he did not go on board the Mexican, while the officers and crew represent several of them to speak English: "the boatswain spoke English pretty well." Ruiz, also, "spoke the English readily." It is therefore utterly impossible, if we believe Perez, that the crew of the Pinda robbed the Mexican. Capt B. says that three spoke broken English. Capt B. says he went to the fore chanel, but Perez says he came alongside opposite the mainmast, and that the men jumped into her from the gangway. This discrepancy should certainly destroy the testimony of one of them.

Perez testifies that the 3d mate hailed the captain of the schooner from the Mexican, with a speaking-trumpet, and said, "What you seek is here"—but Reed, the mate of the Mexican, says that the hailer said "Bastante de denario." This is a counterfeit phrase, and one, we are told by Spaniards, that no Spaniard would ever use—a Spaniard would say "Denario bastante." The phrase sworn to by Reed is evidently made up for the occasion. Perez says, over and over again, that only four men went into the American boat, while Capt R. says "five ruffians jumped into my boat;" the log-book says five; the printed statement says five. Boyga is identified as one who went on board, but Perez gives us the names of those who went on board—Garcia, Castillo, Montenegro, adding the names of seven others, who he says, are all dead. Perez says that a piece of duck was taken from the Mexican, but Capt B., though questioned, does not mention duck. The same veracious witness says the boatswain had a sword, and flung a handful of money into the ocean, but the mate of the Mexican, who was near, and heard the hailing, saw nothing of this—nor had the boxes been opened. How is it that so extraordinary an act was not witnessed by some of the crew of the Mexican, who were all about the deck. None of them saw this money thrown overboard. * * *

Fuller testifies that the boatswain wore a white felt hat, with a low, round crown, but the state's evidence swears that there never was such a hat on board of the Pinda. Perez says the carpenter wore a cap—Battis that he wore a tarpaulin hat—and if he was mistaken about the hat, may he not mistake about the HEAD that was under the hat? Capt B. and other witnesses say that the schooner gave chase to another ship, and that is the way he escaped from her, and the destruction hanging over him. Perez had adjusted his evidence as far as to get in the ship: it was easy to tell that prominent fact—but he says the schooner ran away from her. Again the log-book of the Mexican says the "schooner chased the ship, and undoubtedly captured her." The first gun of the piratical schooner was fired, but the Pinda's was always abait the mainmast; and we cannot possibly believe that the two schooners were identical. The log-book is clear: "We plainly saw that he had two long brass 12 pounders, and a long pivot gun amidships." There is no evidence, no pretence that she had ever made any alterations in her armament. Ridgely points out some of the mutineers as the men who robbed the Mexican: Lewis, the steward, goes to the south side of the sail, and, for man, from the one he selects on the stand. Ridgely marks out one of his own color, the simple-hearted African, for death, by the same rash and reckless testimony.

I am happy to be able to say, that Captain Butman's testimony, as to the identity of the prisoners, is marked by the caution and reserve of an honest man. I look upon this caution as affording a proof that he is a highly honorable and well meaning man. He says he cannot swear to one of these men. Yes, Capt. B., with all his superior advantages for knowing, tells us that he cannot swear to one; and who are they that swear with such alacrity and energy, and display so much anxiety for the sacrifice?—the ignorant, rash and unobscrvant.—Capt B. knew, that if he but pointed his finger at one of those men, he might be pointing the finger of death upon a fellow creature; but the small people—the heedless—have no hesitation, and the jury will judge upon the strength of the grounds upon which they feel so confident. Reed, the mate, is quite confident of Boyga and Ruiz, but the latter when confronted by the witness, looked with far greater serenity—the mate could not rest his eye on the pupil of the prisoner's eye. We observed a pallid hue in his cheek—his blood recoiled upon his heart to sustain it beneath the steady glance of the eye of an innocent man, that will always blanch the cheek of the guilty. Larkin and Battis never mentioned to any of their acquaintances that they recognised any of the prisoners, when they saw them first; and is it not very strange that all the witnesses observed this remarkable prudence and discretion not to mention it, under circumstances so calculated to make them break out with their great discovery. One, a boy, was surrounded by his friends—yet, boy as he was, says not a word. I believe then that this remarkable coincidence between them of suppressing their recognitions, is the result entirely and totally of after conversation, and nothing else.

Daniels recognises Ruiz as one who was walking about the deck, but Battis knows him to be the man that was standing guard over the scuttle; his occupation was an essential part of his identity, and in that they do not agree. * * * The boatswain was the most active of the robbers—he pushed the mate forward and took his watch, and he is described by the mate to be five feet high, stout built; Larkin says 5 ft. 4, not stout, and spoke English; Battis says 5 ft, and not stout, Roman nose, with a bunch on one side of it, with a white felt hat, and blue jacket; Daniels says 5 ft, 2 or 3; Lewis gives him a tarpaulin hat and a monkey jacket. Perez says the boatswain of the Pinda was SIX feet high, with a sabre cut across the nose, and was always known by his nose—wore a cap or a straw hat, but never had a white felt hat, and had on a black monkey jacket.

If the boatswain played the diabolical part testified to, acting so like a tiger, would they not have recollected his nose and height? It is impossible that the man they describe was the boatswain of the Pinda. These are the results of an attempt to ascertain the identity of the men who boarded the Mexican; and taking into consideration the cautious silence of the captain, and the chaotic and confused testimony of the other witnesses, can there be any hesitation in giving a verdict of acquittal? [We have noted but a portion of the discrepancies suggested by Mr C. respecting the identity and attire of the prisoners.]

In Capt B.'s printed statement, the figure head of the schooner is said to be very large, with a horn of Plenty carved upon it, and painted white; but Silvers, who saw it in the river Nazareth, says there was nothing carved on the figure head of the Pinda. Perez says this figure head was cut off in the river, and an awkward piece of wood substituted in place of it. Quentin says it was cut off smooth, like the stem of a boat.—These witnesses neutralize and destroy each other.—If Perez had said the piece of wood was put on and taken off again, then his evidence would have been prepared to receive Mr Quentin's testimony. * * * These very pirates intended to save the life of Capt. Trotter—Mr Quentin says he has no doubt of it—when he had violated the sovereignty of an African state, by his capture of the Pinda. Is this the disposition manifested by pirates, who have been robbed of the very means of gaining their livelihood, or the means of returning to their native country? The Portuguese witnesses had been 4 months with the prisoners at Nazareth, but never heard a word about the money they had or the robbery. They contradict Perez about running the Pinda ashore; they say she was run ashore, because she had sprung a leak in touching the bar. * *

After speaking six hours, without concluding his argument, Mr Child moved for an adjournment, which accordingly took place.

Foreign News and Miscellany.

Royal Vocation.—At the epoch of the American war, and the change of Ministry to which George III. was reluctantly compelled by Parliament, Charles X. (at that period Comte d'Artois), exclaimed, in the hearing of the British ambassador, that the Kings of England were mere slaves, and that he would rather be a groom. "Monseigneur," replied his Excellency Lord Stair, "that depends on taste and habit."

Influence of the Crown.—One day, during the earlier portion of the reign of Louis XV, some person was besieging Monsieur de Montbarrey, who had the honour of being admitted to his especial confidence, with petitions for a place. "If ever his Majesty should obtain the slightest influence," replied the courier, "I will not forget you."

New Use for a Sword.—Meo, the Ude of Italy, and chief cook to his Majesty the King of Etruria, used to announce dinner to their Majesties, attired in a full court suit, with a sword by his side, which he contrived to put to better use than that of his immortal predecessor Vatel. Whenever a joint of venison was served at table, Meo used to draw his sword, and, plunging it into the game, ascertain, by passing the weapon under his nose, whether the venison had been kept and roasted to the right minute.

Spanish Refinement.—A correspondent of the Chronicle says—"The bull fight, being the first after the cholera, has been very much attended. The circus looked splendid. A galaxy of beauty adorned the front seats of the boxes. Six bulls were killed, and nine horses fell by the horns of the infuriated brutes. The famous Montes did wonders in his line—jumping over the bull, and playing with his gay red cloak. The fight lasted till it was dark, when the Prado was crowded, as it usually is. Madrid is become as gay as ever.

A Wise Bench.—At the Petty Sessions, at Mistlay, England, a man was charged with stealing a dog; and the evidence seemed very conclusive. An objection, however, being raised on the part of the prisoner, that the dog was a bitch, the bench decided it to be fatal to the indictment, and the prisoner was discharged. A female dog, therefore, agreeably to this wise decision, is no dog.

Bulwer, in his narrative of the recent French Revolution, remarks—"Having at an unfavorable moment wished to govern the nation by its reason, the Doctrinaires lost all its hold upon its sympathies." The same author says—"The man who is merely animated and picturesque in conversation, is apt to become bombastic and extravagant before a popular assembly."

Singular and interesting fact.—On opening recently an Etruscan vase, taken from the ruins of Herculeum, the learned Abbe Facciolate found an orange pickled in vinegar, in perfect preservation; from which it appears that the ancient Romans made use of oranges as we do of gherkins.

Civic Sagacity.—Horace Walpole tells a story of a Lord Mayor of London in his time, who, having heard that a friend had the small pox twice, and died of it, inquired if he died the first time or the second?

The Poles of the duchy of Posen are still cruelly persecuted. Two Polish gentlemen recently married were put in prison for sending relief to their brethren abroad. The nobles are so heavily fined, that they have to sell their estates, and even the tomb of one of the families was ransacked for arms!

Affairs in Portugal are quiet, and her finances in good condition. The chambers are determined to give full liberty to the press. The gallant Duke of Terceira is at the head of the war department, and is a check to the ambition of his rival Saldanha.

Two young folks were lately married at Cheltenham perfectly blind, and the bridesmaid, who led them, partially so. Love is certainly blind in this case, at all events.

"The bride love blind for her blind bridegroom sighs, And a blind bridesmaid gives the bridegroom eyes."

District No. 4.—It is now certain that there has been no choice of member of Congress in this district. We understand that returns from one or two of the towns were not received at the Secretary's office yesterday, which was the last day of grace. The number of votes given for the three highest candidates were for Samuel Hoar 2966, James Russell 1595, Heman Lincoln 1595. Mr Hoar has lost his election by 113 votes, exclusive of the scattering. A new election will take place in December.—Trans.

A remarkable phenomenon has been observed in the neighborhood of Frankfurt. It is a sudden malady among the mice, thousands of which are found dead or dying in the fields.

The Richmond Palladium, in Indiana, boasts of fine sport lately; wild turkeys in immense quantities had congregated in that vicinity; several bears had also paid a visit, but were not allowed to return to quarters again.

The office of the Tompkins' American, together with three brick buildings and a wagon maker's shop, have been burnt down at Ithaca—loss about $5000.

DAILY REFORMER ASSOCIATION.—There will be an adjourned meeting of this Association on TUESDAY Evening next, Nov 25, at Trades Union Hall, at 7 o'clock. The second installment will then be due. B22. SMT. GEORGE P. OAKES, Assistant Sec'y.

BROAD STREET INFANT SCHOOL SOCIETY.—A sermon will be preached by the Rev Mr Gannett, and a Collection taken in aid of this Society, TO-MORROW EVENING, at the Federal Street Church. Services to commence at half past six o'clock. B22. ABBY M. LORING, Sec'y.
